Please do not allow the NAB to use the FCC to squash the competition by satellite radio. I have been an XM subscriber for the past 8 months or so and find the programming to be vastly superior to broadcast radio both in quality and content and strongly believe that broadcast radio should improve its quality and content also, not ask the government to stifle competition. If the FCC rules to curtail programming by satellite radio, the consumer is the big loser. Support the freedom of expression and creativity offered by satellite radio. If this goes through, cable and satellite television could be next.

Thank you.

Sincerely,
Keith W. Obrosky
